Water scarcity and drought is threatening people, economies and our environment around the world. It has been defined as a major priority for action through SDG 6.4 and the urgent need for climate adaptation. The recent Water Scarcity and Drought Summit (Brisbane, 10 October 2016) and related side events at the COP22 have defined clear priorities to take action and building an agenda around water scarcity and drought for countries and business working closely with civil society and knowledge partners around the world. Participants to the side event will be invited to engage in the discussion and to provide further input to build this agenda and the new ways of working and cooperation to emerge from this.
